

Overthinker

3/6/2024

When I took this picture of a common Squirrel monkey, it just had its eyes half closed. Almost letting you think that monkeys also have daily problems or are in need of a power nap. Usually they are constantly moving so taking pictures of them can sometimes result in crazy funny photos.

Post

Caught in the act: Golden-handed Tamarin

10/1/2022

Nature - My View

What do you do when you see a ripe soursop in plain view? You just go and grab what your small hands can handle and eat as much as possible. That is what this Golden-handed Tamarin had in mind. He was in a small group enjoying from this fruit but when I saw them, he was the only one who was still holding onto this fruit. Like he didn't want to let go. All I did was grab my camera and shoot this whole ordeal.

Post

White-faced Saki

9/7/2022

Nature - My View

Quite a surprise to see the White-faced Saki group again. Usually they leave the area the moment they see me. This group was busy eating Inga fruits and this male had won the lottery. He wasn't very happy at all to see me. And while I was photographing him, I "accidentally" shot a younger male too.

Post

Looking at a Brown Capuchin Monkey

9/5/2022

I saw a group of Brown Capuchin Monkeys passing by right in front of me. It isn't always easy to capture one of them while on the move between the bushes, leaves and vine tangles but you just keep on trying. This one looked right at me and I shot this little monkey. I do like the facial expression.

They may be common but still I take pictures of them.

Post

Barely there: Golden-handed Tamarin

1/19/2022

Nature - My View

Golden-handed Tamarins are small agile monkeys living in groups. When noticed they move quite fast before you even noticed them. So when you want to take a picture of them, you must always be prepared for the worse. When I noticed a group of Golden-handed Tamarins I was already too late. This one just gave me a quick glance before departing. So it looks like it was peeking through and I didn't manage to get a full body shot.

Post

White-faced Saki

12/22/2021

Nature - My View

This is the female White-faced Saki, also known as Guianan saki or Golden-faced Saki. When looking at her you won't find any White-faced or Golden-faced on her, it is referred to the male. But like all wild animals in the jungle, they are unpredictable. You never know what to expect from them, just be prepared for anything. In this case, I wasn't really prepared as I accidentally cut out her tail.

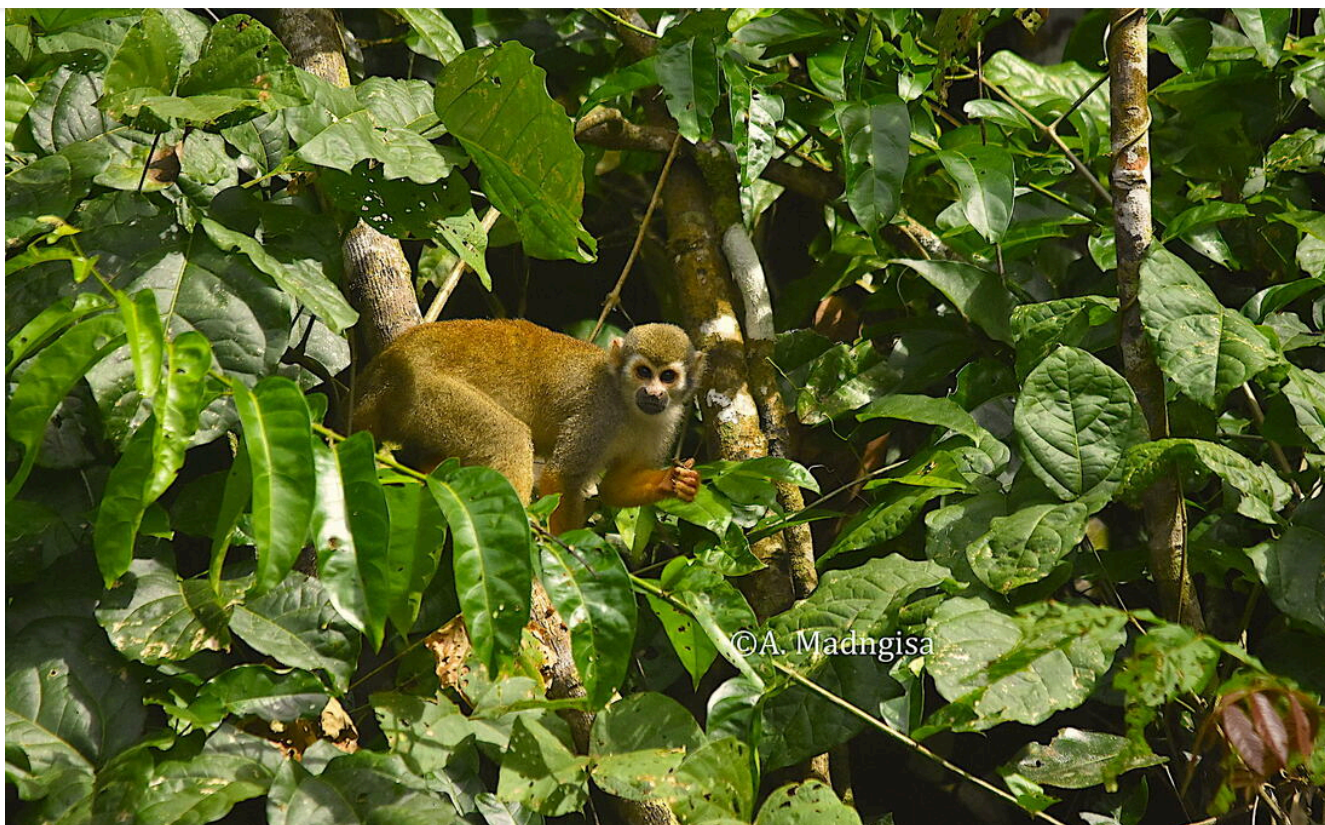

Post

Photo of the day: Common Squirrel Monkey

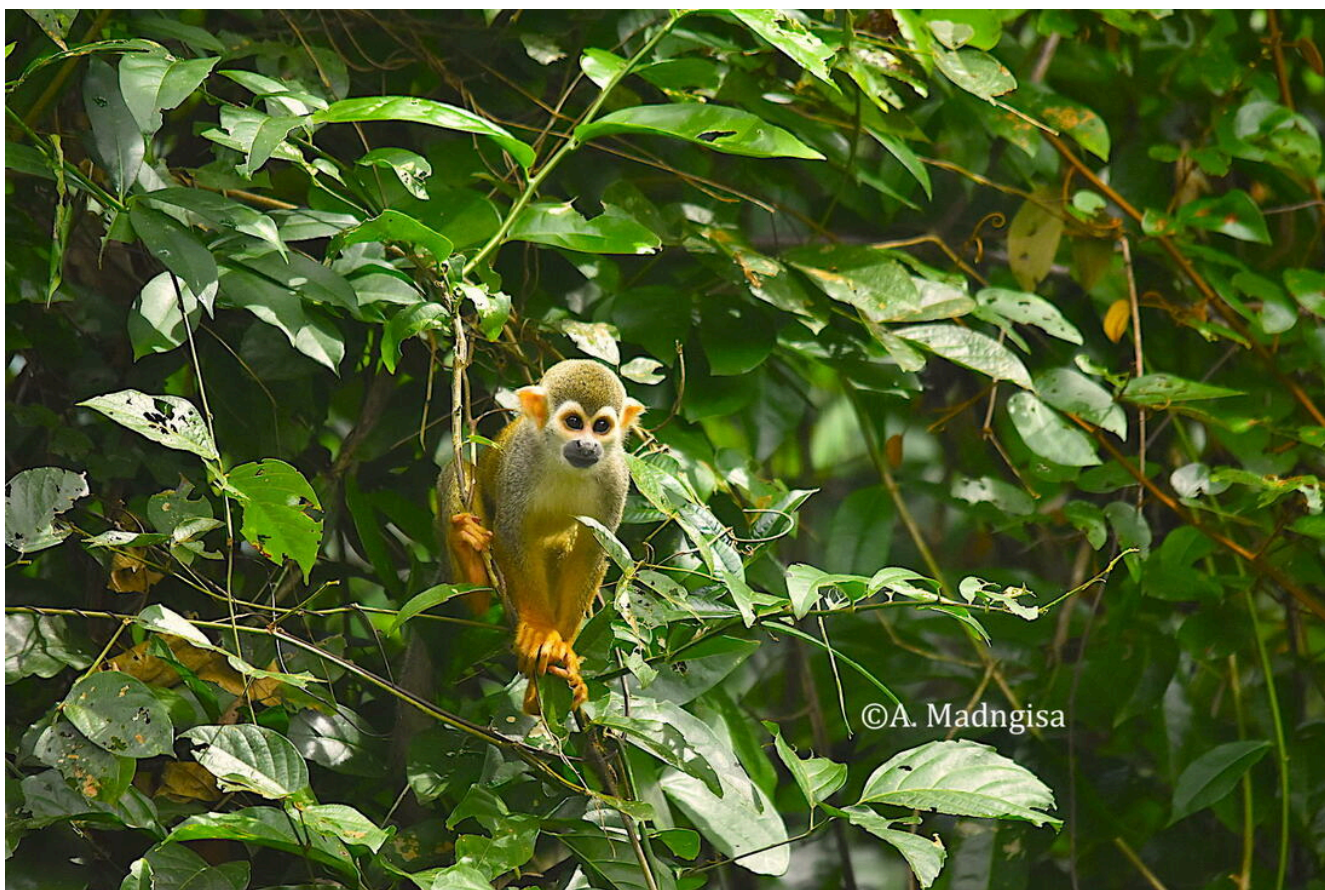

4/21/2021

Nature - My View

I saw this Common Squirrel Monkey out in the open, compared to his companions who were more inside the dense vegetation of the Kabalebo forest. As usual they are always looking for something to eat along the way. By the look on this monkey's face, he wasn't quite happy with my presence

..... at first. But in the end he was also a bit curious. How the tables have turned.

8/5/2020

Red Howler Monkeys are also known as social animals. I have always seen them either resting, eating or traveling as a group.

Here you see one of the members of such a group. It is a mother with her infant. Still a young lad as it was seen clinging onto its mother. The group was resting and the mother decided to find a quiet spot to be alone with her baby. Sometimes I see the mothers play with their baby. The only time she lets go of her little one is when she has to eat. The baby is hanging, most of the time, up side down nearby until she is done eating.

Even in the jungle mothers know how to take care of the little ones.

Post

Guianan-bearded Saki

11/3/2019

One you don't meet very often; the Guianan Bearded Saki.

Read More

Post

A close up meeting

9/5/2018

Nature - My View

Getting close with nature; meeting Brown Capuchin Monkeys.

Read More

Post

Grab and go

2/14/2018

Nature - My View

When you are in a rush, there is no time to stay and enjoy your meal.

Read More

Post

Nice Surprise

9/27/2017

Nature - My View

A close encounter with a Golden-handed Tamarin.

Read More

Post

A close encounter

5/1/2017

Nature - My View

It felt like big brother was watching me.

Read More

Post

Mrs Saki

4/26/2017

Nature - My View

Meeting a female White-faced Saki is an unusual moment.

Read More

Post

Our very own gingers

4/17/2017

Nature - My View

Here is why they are called the Red Howler Monkeys.

Read More

Post

On a lower level

11/25/2016

Caught red handed at the Suites: the Golden-handed Tamarin.

Read More

Post

Shy vs Confidence

11/2/2016

Even monkeys need some confidence in their life.

Read More

Post

A nutritious snack

10/31/2016

Nature - My View

This Common Squirrel Monkey just found a tasty snack for himself.

Read More

Post

Selective

9/9/2016

Sometimes Common Squirrel Monkeys can be very selective when choosing their food.

Read More

Post

Speechless

8/17/2016

Nature - My View

Who was speechless: me or this Squirrel Monkey?

Read More

Post

Maripa palm

8/8/2016

Loved by many: the Maripa Palm.

Read More

Post

All you can eat!

7/5/2016

Nature - My View

When there is free food in abundance, you just grab what you like to eat.

Read More

Post

A day off!

5/23/2016

Nature - My View

There are days that you just want to relax and do absolutely nothing.

Read More

Post

Looking beyond!

3/9/2016